The poets enter the first circle of Hell—Limbo—the place where virtuous pagans reside. Black Black Guelph. Evil Counselors 9. Suddenly, a raging demon appears, and Virgil hides Dante behind a large rock. Virgil, on the other hand, is a virtuous poet who sang their praises and is thus better suited to speak with. Fortune tellers 5. A noise like a hurricane causes the poets to look toward Styx, and they see a figure crossing without touching the marsh.

This cord seem to come from nowhere; it is not mentioned previously and there the poem, Dante is advocating a strict adherence to medieval Catholic theology: Man must consciously strive for righteousness and morality. One sinner is slow in ducking back into the pitch fast enough and is caught by one of the demons who pulls him out of the pitch by his hair.
